

The Act of Right Now

Before you started reading this article, what were you doing? On any given day, what is it that you do the most after you return home from work? Finally, is your life where you want it to be at this very moment?

Our days are filled with movement, and each hour of the day is filled with decisions. We decide when to move, how to move, and where to move at any given moment. As a result, life decides when to move for us, how to move in us and where to move us to. What has manifested for us in our lives is a direct reflection of what we have conceived in your day-to-day choices. Sometimes we love what manifests; and other times, we want no part of what has manifested. Look around you. Your home, your lifestyle, your finances, your health, and how you feel is a direct response from your choices. What you choose to do is a reflection of your faith or lack thereof. Life is but a big mirror that constantly reflects what is on the inside of us by making it appear on the outside of us.

Many souls don't realize the impact of their choices, and how one choice can forever cast a negative reflection on their lives or one choice can forever cast a positive reflection on their lives. It is all wrapped up in choices, and unwrapped by God. Once God views our actions, He responds to them by declaring them good or evil. After He has made His declaration, consequences comes to follow through with the reaction. If what you did pleased the Lord, consequences loses its "con" and becomes sequences. A series of blessings will follow you, and every plan of the enemy for your life will be thwarted. Nevertheless, when your choices are evil, consequences follow through with what God has already declared about the sinner. In addition, your wrong choices gives Satan permission to act out in your life, relationships, marriage, finances, and health.

Let's get back to the reflection of your today. What is it that is reflecting for you right now, and what are you doing to change that reflection? If you stood in the mirror and noticed that you were overweight, would you buy a new mirror in hopes of seeing a skinnier you, or would you try to do something about your weight? Of course, changing the mirror won't change your reflection. Your right now is making decisions for your later. The choices you make today will determine what manifests for you tomorrow. Each moment is a step forward or a retreat that takes us in a direction of the blessings of God, or in the direction of the wrath of God. Even sitting idly births consequences because even when you choose not to move, the earth continues to spin on it axle. This means that life continues on with or without you.

As human beings, we are often weighed down by the issues that have made themselves known in our lives. We often spend our time trying to directly or indirectly deal with those issues, and our days pass by swiftly as we spend them trying to eliminate the problems in our lives. The problem with this, however, is that those problems won't go away because you are dealing with them; problems self destruct when you choose to obey God in your choices. That means that you shouldn't worry about the issues that have manifested for you; instead, make choices right now to see a better turnout for your later. If you stay in obedience, any and everything birthed in disobedience will eventually starve to death and fall away from you. All the same, if your today is spent dealing with the manifestation of your choices from yesterday, undoubtedly your tomorrow will be spent dealing with the manifestation of your choices from today.

Our relationships have a direct impact on our now's and our later's. We are held responsible and given the wages of our decisions to carry on friendships, associations, and romantic relationships with others. Whatever is in your friend's life will eventually become a part of your life because in linking up with them, you are in the same unifying with them. This is why you have to watch your communications with others, and always align your ways with the Word of God.

Who are you linked up to, and how are they affecting your life? Do they bring out the best of you or the worst in you? Every decision that you make will affect your future. Every association you have in your life is either adding to you or taking from you. Are they adding joy, peace and blessings to your life; or are they adding a few smiles followed by a lot of frowns, misery, and curses to your life? To be blessed and stay blessed, you have to remove any and everything that comes against your blessings.

What about your "right now?" Ask yourself this: In all that I am doing today, how is it going to affect me tomorrow? Will my actions send forward a blessing or will they send forward a curse? Are my actions fruitful or seedless? Are my choices right now going to benefit me in any way later? Are my habits giving value to my life, or are they stealing my time and robbing me of precious breaths? These are questions that you not only need to ask yourself today, but you need to ask yourself these questions quite often. Every moment is your "right now" and every "right now" is going to affect your future in a positive or a negative way. Every choice is a power that is either charging you or draining you. It's up to you what you do with your choices. Will yourself to do the will of God, and you will see a better turnout of blessings in your life. Stand firm in HIM, and let nothing move you away from His will for your life.

Don't serve:

Other people and their opinions.

Your boredom.

Other people's boredom.

The expectation of others.

The self-imposed expectation of your sinful self.

Do serve the living God through your obedience. Know this: Every blessing that you have wished to God for is waiting on you to enter obedience to embrace it.
